Editor's Note

A school magazine is the literary mirror of a school - reflecting its academic vigour and co-curricular vibrancy.

In my dual capacity as PGT English and Activity In-charge, I have witnessed our students excel not only in their pursuit of knowledge but also in their pursuit of passion. This magazine is a celebration of that holistic growth.

I congratulate all our contributors and sincerely thank everyone who has contributed to making this edition a reality.

From the Desk

Dear readers,

Education is not confined to textbooks and examinations; it is about igniting curiosity and empowering minds to think independently.

Our students of Grades 6-12 stand at the threshold of their future, and it is heartening to see them articulate their perspectives with such clarity and creativity. This magazine is a testament to their imagination, intellect, and innovation.

I applaud all our student contributors and thank our teachers and editorial board for shaping this edition with such precision and passion.

Shivali Garg
Senior coordinator

I hope this magazine inspires you, as much as it has inspired us.

A Mother's Love

A mother's love is selfless, it knows no bounds, it's the quiet strength, the softest heart, and the greatest love you will always be her child.

Education: A Gift and Our Parents' Sacrifice

Education is the key to a bright future. It helps us gain knowledge, build confidence, and achieve our dreams.

Better Education
Brighter Future

Today, many students are distracted by mobile phones, social media, and peer pressure. In trying to fit in with others, they sometimes forget the hard work of their parents, who make everyday sacrifices for their children.

Our parents work tirelessly to provide us with education and a better life. Their dedication teaches us the value of discipline, responsibility, and perseverance.

The best way to thank our parents is by studying sincerely, making good choices, and working hard towards our goals. When we value education and respect our parents' efforts, it makes us more successful.

The Great Indian Paradox: A Country That Doesn't Feel Rich

By: Anshuman and Naitik | Class: 9th A

Every morning in cities like Noida or Gurugram, two different Indias wake up side by side. In one, people step into air-conditioned offices, swipe access cards, and work for global companies. In the other, just across the road, someone is stuck in traffic a broken road or living in a crowded settlement. Both are real. And both exist at the same time.

On paper, India looks powerful. It is one of the largest economies in the world. It builds digital systems used by millions and sends missions into space, even at half the budget of the USA, China, or Russia. But for many ordinary people like us, daily life still feels like a struggle – – unpredictable income, poor infrastructure, and limited opportunities.

The problem begins with how growth is shared. Jobs make the gap even worse. Many young people study hard and earn degrees, hoping for a better job. But the economy has not created enough jobs. Instead, millions end up jobless.

It is easier to give speeches than to deliver results, and emotional issues are easier to control than economic ones. As a result, people spend time arguing over beliefs, history, and symbolism – on social media, television, and in everyday conversation – while critical demands like better schools, hospitals, clean water, and stable jobs lose urgency.

When attention shifts, accountability weakens. When accountability weakens, corruption grows stronger. This creates a cycle that is hard to break: corruption weakens systems, weak systems create frustration, and frustration is redirected into divisive debates instead of real reform. The more divided people become, become, the less they demand actual performance.

Stuck in the 'Loop of Religion and Caste'.

Instead of focusing on economic growth, much of the country is stuck in a loop of religion. Politicians frequently use religious politics to divide the people, knowing it is easier. Because of this, the public spends a massive amount of time and energy on the internet and watching TV news, a argung over religious beliefs, building temples, and fighting over history. They get so distracted by these emotional debates that they forget to demand what really matters: better schools, hospitals, and development. True progress stops.

Change the Mindset Not the Girl

Respect
Equality
Freedom
For All

Same Dreams
Same Rights
Same Value

Many people say that girls should dress carefully to stay safe. But I think the real problem is the way some people think. Clothes do not tell us about a person's character. Everyone should be respected no matter what she wears. Instead of always telling girls to be careful, we should teach everyone to respect others.

Her Dreams
Matter

Boys and girls should learn from a young age that respect, kindness, and good behaviour are the most important things. A safe society is created by good values, not by controlling girls. Girls have the same right to study, work, travel, and follow their dreams without fear. They should not think that they have to change themselves because of the wrong actions of others. Every person deserves freedom, safety, and respect.

Kind
People Are Powerful

- ✓ Respect
- ✓ Equality
- ✓ Freedom
- ✓ Education
- ✓ Dreams
- ✓ Safety
- ✓ Kindness

If we really want to make our society better, we should change our thinking. We should stop judging girls by their clothes and judging people by their actions. Better mindset can create a better future for everyone.

A safe society starts with a change in mindset.

Success depends upon hardwork, confidence and dettermination not gender. Everyone should have the freedom for choosing their own path .

Strong
Girls
Build Stronger Societies

Stop judging people by the clothes, looks or choices and start respecting them for their values and actions. A better mindset can create a safe environment for every human being.

Girls are not weak,
they are powerful

CLICHED: THE LABELS WE PUT ON STUDENTS

1. The Dream vs. Reality

In India, every student studying in class 10th dreams that once they reach class 11th, they will get the opportunity to choose a stream according to their own wishes. But is it really true? Can every student choose their stream as per their own wish without being forced by parents, teachers, friends and society? It is just a bookish thought; the reality is much different.

2. How Society Judges

Our society judges students by their marks, their stream, and whether they study in a better or more expensive school or university. They are never judged by their talent, knowledge, behaviour and interest. Society always recommends students to choose the Science stream. According to them, only Science stream students are more knowledgable, smarter, get good marks and have a secured future. Those who choose any other other stream are considered average or backbenchers.

3. The Heavy Cost

Because of this, most students choose the Science stream to increase their status in society and to show that they are smarter. In the future, these same students have to pay for it, sometimes even with their lives, when they are seen as a failure in society because they are forced to clear exams like JEE and NEET in the name of future scope.

4. Schools Must Embrace Diversity

The schools should also understand the value of diversity without creating any discrimination. They should appreciate children from every field and try to explain the importance of student's choice and passion to their parents. This way students will feel encouraged and valued.

5. The World Needs All Roles

We know that the concepts of Science and Maths are everywhere in our environment and those who understand them deeply make unexpected inventions. But our world does not only need scientists but also C.A, I.A.S officers, politicians, leaders and many more.

6. Let Every Child Choose

In conclusion, our society needs to understand its children and encourage them to fulfil their interests and wishes and give them the right to choose their own career willingly. Because - "Every child has a different talent, interest and character."

7. A Modern, Developed Society

As a society, we need to give them opportunities and a stage to express themselves, where they can express themselves without any hesitation. When all these things happen in our society, then we will become a modern and developed country.
